Divine Justice in the Distribution of Human Gifts: Understanding the Divine System for Humanity

Every human group on this earth has been granted unique gifts by God, differing from one group to another. These gifts are not random; they are part of a precise system that balances endowment and responsibility. Understanding this system allows one to see the truth behind human diversity and avoid superficial conflicts and comparisons.

Genetic Gifts: A Divine Grant, Not a Comparison

Each human group carries genetic endowments, which are a divine grant before being considered a natural advantage.

A group given a certain gift should understand that others must work much harder and longer to reach what they were granted innately.

For example:

- One human group is endowed with physical strength.
- Another human group is endowed with intelligence and cognitive ability.

The best approach is for each group to focus on its primary gifts, develop them, and be grateful, while also striving to improve other areas without conflict or envy.

Those granted physical strength must work hard and train to develop intelligence.
Those granted intelligence must exert effort and discipline to improve physical abilities.

Problems arise when some attempt to take others' gifts instead of cultivating their own; here, it is not the other who loses, but one's own eyes are blinded from enjoying the gifts they were given.

Golden Rule:

Focus on your own gifts, develop them, and be grateful to God for them; a gift that is not appreciated cannot be properly utilized.

Diversity of Gifts and Rising Responsibility

The more diverse and distinguished the gifts of a human group or individual, the greater the responsibility placed upon them.

- Multiple gifts do not imply unchecked privilege; they signify greater accountability.
- Distinction comes with greater judgment: a group or individual endowed with multiple talents must use them wisely and justly.
- This demonstrates a key principle of the divine system: the greater the grant, the greater the responsibility and accountability, maintaining balance between gifts and duty.

Lesson: Distinction is not a reason for arrogance or superficial competition, but an opportunity for commitment, growth, and service to others.

1. Fundamental Principle: Gifts and Responsibility

- Each human group possesses abilities or traits granted by God: physical strength, intelligence, knowledge, discipline, or distinctive appearance, among other gifts.
- Each gift comes with a corresponding duty and responsibility. The greater the gift, the greater the accountability.
- This explains why the paths of human groups differ in their responsibilities, even with similar traits.

2. Types of Human Gifts

Physical Appearance and Color

- Some human groups are granted specific physical features.

- Responsibility: respect oneself and others, and avoid using appearance as a measure of superiority.

Physical Strength

- Some human groups possess exceptional physical power.
- Responsibility: self-control, protecting others, and avoiding abuse of strength.

Intelligence and Cognitive Ability

- Some human groups are distinguished by high innovation and problem-solving skills.
- Responsibility: developing knowledge, making wise decisions, and serving society.

Discipline

- Orderliness and self-discipline within a human group.
- Responsibility: maintaining achievements and fulfilling commitments.

Knowledge and Science

- Those granted specialized knowledge or skills.
- Responsibility: use knowledge for good, share it, and avoid misuse.

3. Human Behavior Toward Gifts

- Awareness of true value: recognizing that each human group has unique gifts; superficial comparison is not a measure of worth.
- Inferiority complex and control: some attempt to dominate others due to inner insecurity, not the divine system of gifts.

- Focus on responsibility: understanding that greater gifts mean greater accountability explains why paths differ even among groups with similar traits.

4. The Circulation of Favor Between Groups

- Fortunes and capabilities shift over time: sometimes one group excels over another, and priorities may change. This is natural within the divine system.
- Commitment of the superior group: groups granted superiority must fulfill their responsibilities; failure may lead God to withdraw the privilege and excellence.
- Effort of the less advantaged: groups not currently superior should accept reality and strive to advance through cultivating their own gifts, not through conflict or imitation.

5. Summary of Illumination

- Divine justice is precise: every human group is distinguished by what God has granted and accountable for its gifts.
- Pride in origin is acceptable as recognition of identity and roots but does not confer absolute superiority unless merit is earned.
- Superficial social conflicts, such as attempts to assert dominance or diminish others, reflect ignorance or inferiority complexes, not reality.
- True excellence is linked to fulfilling responsibilities and developing granted gifts, not to conflict or envy.

Core Lesson:

The true value of every human group lies not in color, appearance, or origin, but in how gifts are used and responsibilities are fulfilled. Understanding this system allows one to live in inner peace, respect others, and benefit from every difference as a source of deep wisdom.
